Excerpt: .happy, pleasant scene with mingled feelings, and tried to think out what was the daily life in this sequestered mill; and if my paddling did for a time become a little sentimental, it may be pardoned by travellers who have come among kind friends where they expected perhaps a cold rebuff. The romantic effect of all this was to make me desperately hungry, for be it known that bread and wine and Beethoven will not do to dine upon if you are rowing forty miles in the sun, So it must be confessed that when an hour afterwards I saw an auberge by the water s edge it became necessary to stifle my feelings by ordering an omelette and two chops. The table was soon spread under a shady pear tree just by the water, and the Rob Roy rested gently on the ripples at...
