It was described in the Miami Conservancy Bulletin for October, from which the accompanying illustrations are reprinted. Sand Filters for Small Sewage Plants By W. A. Hardenbergh When suitable; construction requirements of several state health boards. In a recent issue the disposal of the effluent from residential and other small sewage treatment plants by means of sub-surface irrigation was discussed at some length, and the recommendations of various state boards of health were given. Under certain conditions this method of treatment is best suited for residence and small community use. These conditions include a well-laid distribution area and a porous soil. The latter, unfortunately, cannot always be secured, and costly substitutes must be found. Also, in the case of institutions using fairly large quantities of water, a considerable area is...
